

My new favourite bird.

This little girl and fellow are the Olive Backed Sunbird. They have been playing around at the back of my site for the past couple of days. They are no bigger than the finches of the Kimberley but they are nectar eaters and you can see some pollen on the tip of the sharp little beak. There seems to be some nest building going on so maybe later I might get some really interesting stuff.

As for the last photo in this very short part of the journal, I must have too much time on my hands. Earlier today I was looking through my archives of 10's of thousands of photos looking for something and came across my series of Lunar Eclipse photos from Burketown from last year. Then inspiration struck and the last photo is the result.
